

Kim Markel

glow collection 2016

Press Release
March 15, 2016

Kim Markel's work celebrates the experience of feeling magic in ordinary objects.

Slight oddities like a subtle change in scale, too unusual of a color, a quirky variation of form- are often enough to elicit this sense of magic.

The objects are handcrafted from reclaimed plastic bonded with resin. Reclaimed plastics come from various sources: soda bottles, styrofoam, lunch trays, and eyeglasses- all at the end of their usable lives.

The results are serendipitous.

Kim's work comes from the need to create but the desire to do it in a responsible way. She makes everything by hand in her Beacon, NY based studio.

Kim is self taught through experimenting, breaking, asking, and learning. She earned degrees at Carnegie Mellon in seemingly unrelated disciplines.

Kim's work will debut at Booth M405 in the MADE section of the AD Show.

Here's to objects born of an unbridled reality.
